Respect Ripples

As we approach the finish line for our masters and doctors degree, we find ourselves thinking back on the life-changing educational journey that has brought us to this point. Our comprehension of the world and its complexity has grown deeper with each passing year, as has our appreciation of the responsibility that comes with a higher level of education.

We acquire an endless amount of knowledge, critical thinking abilities, and the capacity to make significant contributions to our professions as a result of education, especially at the master's or doctoral levels. While pursuing intellectual development, it's important to keep in mind that real education encompasses more than just academic success. It includes the formation of moral principles, values, and a deep respect for other people.

Stress has inevitably become a part of our lives in this fast-paced, connected world. Sometimes the demands of academic life become too much, and it is at these times that our true character is put to the test. However, it is precisely in these trying conditions that our commitment to respect should be clearest.

Respect goes well beyond simple politeness or etiquette; it transcends even the most basic of relationships. It includes respecting others' dignity, actively listening, and appreciating their various points of view. Respect is a virtue that helps us foster cooperation, innovation, and the free flow of ideas. Breakthroughs result from these interactions, allowing us to push the boundaries of knowledge and contribute significantly to society.

Additionally, respect begets respect. When we show kindness and consideration to others, we encourage them to follow similar. The future leaders who will follow in our footsteps are shaped by the amazing example we set with our acts.

Education is about more than just acquiring knowledge; it's also about developing character. We have a responsibility to promote respect in all facets of our lives as educated individuals. By doing this, we protect the integrity of our education and help create a society that values empathy, cooperation, and understanding.

MESSAGE

FROM GRADUATE SCHOOL DEAN

I am delighted to extend my congratulations to the staff and adviser of the Graduate School Newsletter on the release of its second issue under the new name "Kadsamikal."

The selection of the name "Kadsamikal" is highly appropriate and meaningful. It encapsulates the spirit of perseverance required in the pursuit of a Master's or Doctorate degree. Those who possess patience and perseverance are more likely to find success along their academic journey.

The Graduate School has undergone major developments in the past years, which are pleasing and appreciated by students. In addition to voicing their reactions, students should be partners in the development of the school by implementing proactive strategies, activities, and endeavors.

Graduate School Newsletter must not serve as a tool for heavy criticism of the administration or any individual at this university. Instead, this should be a vehicle to improve learning, to improve public service, and to improve Filipino's quality of life.

I am challenging the staff of the school paper to remain objective at all times and always adhere to the tenets of responsible journalism.

I look forward to witnessing the continued growth and success of the Graduate School Newsletter under the new name "Kadsamikal." Traffic Lights in Cotabato City: Frustration vs. Road Safety

In the vibrant thoroughfares of Cotabato City, a content that has lately burned conversations and debates on colorful social media platforms is the perpetration of traffic lights. It isn't uncommon to encounter expressions of frustration on social media platforms regarding the nuisances caused by traffic lights.

By following traffic lights, both drivers and climbers can navigate corners in an orderly and effective manner, thereby minimizing the threat of collisions and creating safer terrain for everyone on the road.

The perpetration of traffic lights in Cotabato City is part of a larger action by original authorities to enhance traffic operation and palliate traffic in high-traffic areas. These measures reflect their commitment to perfecting road safety and establishing a more systematized transportation system.

As residents of Cotabato City, we have a significant part to play in fostering a positive and responsible traffic culture. rather than resorting to complaints and frustrations, it's pivotal that we prioritize compliance with traffic lights and demonstrate a sense of discipline and respect for traffic regulations.

It's accessible that detainments at traffic lights can be frustrating, especially during peak hours. Still, it's essential to feel that the purpose of traffic lights is to maintain order and cover the well-being of everyone on the road.

The sweat made by original authorities to enhance traffic operation earn my appreciation and support. Through these measures, we can inclusively work towards creating an effective and safer transportation system in Cotabato City. In conclusion, rather than engaging in online harangues and complaints about traffic lights, let us strive to be responsible and law-abiding road druggies.
